

BallerTV was founded in 2016 by Cramster co-founders Rob Angarita and Aaron Hawkey to provide live video coverage of amateur sports while creating sports media job opportunities in local communities. As of 2018, BallerTV is now a coast-to-coast operation with a network of thousands of broadcasters across the country. We're on track to broadcast our 100,000th game this year — and we're just getting started.

Preparedness

John Wooden famously said, "failing to prepare is preparing to fail." We don't cut corners and we don't leave anything to chance. We make our own luck.

Leave it All on the Floor

Lakers had Kobe, we've got "Bobe".
Bobe's work ethic is unmatched and is the example by which all of us should follow. We have a generational opportunity to build a game changing sports media company, so we should pursue our mission until we have nothing left to give and feel confident that, if we do this, all our hard work will be worth the effort.

Our founders started BallerTV in 2016 with a scrappy 6-man development team — we're now at 20 full-time office staff and roughly 2,000 broadcasting operations staff coast-to-coast, and growing every day. From software engineers, to sales staff to operations managers, BallerTV is constantly innovating broadcasting and logistics solutions to build the world's widest sports network.

We assemble fearless teams, trained to dominate operations challenges and deliver top-notch content to our subscribers.

Want to become a broadcaster? Becoming a broadcaster is always a great way to get a start as part of the BallerTV Team!

Move Without the Ball

We're constantly trying to create opportunities for our teammates by finding ways to be helpful — even when the spotlight isn't on us.
